Meet Meg

Meg's practice concentrates on all facets of residential and commercial real estate transactions and development, representing buyers, sellers, developers, investors, and institutional clients. Meg focuses on the drafting, review, and negotiation of real estate agreements and condominium documents, and oversees and manages transactions for clients, including new construction and condominium conversion purchases and sales.

Although originally from a small town in southern New Hampshire, Meg calls Boston her true "home." She resides in South Boston with her husband, Nick, their son, Jack, daughter, Lennon, and their two mini Australian Labradoodles, Fitz and Toby.

Outside the Office

Meg embraces all aspects of city living, particularly in this ever-developing city.

Meg loves fitness in all forms, travel, spending time with her family and friends, and must always be in close proximity to a body of water.

Background

Prior to joining Ligris, Meg worked at a Boston-founded, national specialist law firm focused on products liability, complex tort defense, and commercial and business litigation. There, she actively litigated cases and participated in alternative dispute resolution. Meg's prior experience helped cultivate her ability to assess and manage risk as well as develop the necessary skills of working with opposing counsel in the interest of reaching meaningful resolutions for her clients.

Why Meg?

Meg prides herself in putting her clients and their best interests above all else. She thrives on bringing positive results while making the entire transaction process as seamless and stress-free as possible. Meg's measured demeanor guarantees that while she will aggressively negotiate for her clients' benefit, she will also work diligently toward reaching a resolution that will satisfy all parties involved.
